America's Cryptogram

A cryptogram is a type of puzzle that consists of a short piece of encrypted text.

In cryptography, a cipher is an algorithm (or procedure) for performing encryption or decryption—a series of well-defined steps that can be followed systematically.

The cipher used to encrypt the text can be simple enough so that the cryptogram can be solved by hand. An example of a substitution cipher is where each letter is replaced by a different letter or number.

Political and military strategists have used simple substitution ciphers to encode secret documents for thousands of years - even back to the Roman Empire's Julius Caesar! The process is simple: change each letter in your document to another letter in the alphabet. Then your new document cannot be easily read by someone who does not have the secret code.

To decipher (or decrypt or decode) the message, you can just go in the other direction:

1. in the first table: assign a number to the letter above it
2. in the second row of dashes: put that letter above the space where the number is
3. does that help you decode the message? If not, go back to step #1 & try again :)

This is a famous phrase that Americans see every day but may not pay attention to it.
